THE INCOME TAX.

Mr. McMillin Begins Debate On it Today.

He Considers it Both Just and Feasible.

ROBBERY MUST END.

He Blames the Republicans for Hard Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 29.—The general debate on the internal revenue bill began today. Senator McMillin of Tennessee, and one of the members of the ways and means committee which framed the bill, opened the debate.

"The Republican party," Mr. McMillin began, "started out for high protection, then clamored for high protection and at last, under the act of 1890, reached the highest protection ever known here. They pretended first that it was for the purpose of protection of infant industries, but finally they proclaimed that they wanted to keep the tariff for capital also and they did so. How do you love its fruit? Are you satisfied with the kind of prosperity it has given?"

"Mr. Chairman, we will not discharge our duty to the people who suffer, we will not keep the pledges that we have made to them, we will not desert that continued support that the American people have given to the Democratic party from time to time if we do not like men, come resolutely to the discharge of this duty and determine whatever else occurs, robbery shall no longer be carried on by any man here. Let us come what will, we will reduce this tariff to a revenue base; we will propose taxes for public purposes and not for private gain or to enable some individuals to accumulate private fortunes at the expense of others."

"The government of the United States requires a vast amount of revenue to carry on its various operations. A less favored people could not meet the excessive drain that is made for the purpose of maintaining it. It requires nearly $8,000,000,000 in federal taxes imposed upon every man, woman and child in the United States for this purpose. This is raised almost entirely from consumption. There is a very small part of it that is a tax upon the wealth of the country.

"Time has come when this should be changed, and I ask any reasonable person whether it is just to expect that a small per cent of this enormous revenue shall be placed upon the accumulated wealth of the country instead of placing it all upon the consumption of the country. Is it not true that the great estates which are protected by our army, which are defended by our navy, which are benefited by the various operations of government, should contribute in some greater degree to carry on that government through which alone they could have been accumulated or by which they are so protected?"

"The people of the United States do not ask that it should be placed upon accumulated wealth. But they do insist that it is not unreasonable or unjust to require that a very small portion shall be. And yet when it is proposed to shift this burden from those who cannot bear it, to those who can, to divide it between consumption and wealth, to shift it from the laborer who has nothing but his power to toil and sweat to the men who have a fortune made, or inherited, we hear a hue and cry raised by some individuals that it is unjust and inequitable in its nature and should not be adopted.

"If we are not to impose any additional tax on citizens, as we are, if we are not to impose a tax on playing cards, as is proposed by us; if we are not to impose a tax on inheritances, and if we are not to place any tax upon the incomes of this country, as this bill provides, or increase the whiskey tax, I wish to know from what source we are to get that deficiency which has been characteristic of the revenues for months past and bids fair to be up to the end of the present, if not the succeeding fiscal year.

"Mr. Chairman, it has been the effort of the ways and means committee to so construct the bill as to leave us as far as possible from this criticism. Unlike the old law it does not require a schedule from every citizen. Only those who have $4,000 income to make return. There is nothing in this against which any just man can complain, there is nothing to arouse fear that any ill may come from it. It is no tax on bread. It is no embargo placed upon prosperity. It is no effort to prevent prosperity. It is no death blow aimed at commerce, but it is an effort to in some way require each citizen to contribute to the government in proportion to what he has contributed.

"We think that the enactment of this law will insure that justice which has so long been denied. We believe that by many who have hitherto not contributed their proportional part of tax to support the government will be required to do so. Sir, I believe that this law did not tend in that direction. I would have my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth and my right hand and forget its cunning before I would give my voice or my vote to this measure. But believing, as I do, that its adoption will result in a public benefaction, my whole heart goes forth in advocacy and I am ready to stand or fall with the principle of equity which it carries."

MADE MILLIONS IN HAWAII.

Mr. Charles E. Bishop Has Contributed a Fortune to Charity.

Mr. Charles E. Bishop is an American who has not only amassed a fortune in Hawaii, but has given away a fortune in charities. It is said that his public benefactions amount to over $500,000, and of course it is impossible to estimate the extent of his private donations. Only a few weeks ago Mr. Bishop presented a ranch of 80,000 acres, stocked with cattle, to the Kamehameha Training school of Honolulu. The gift was worth about $200,000, but the Hawaiians have become so accustomed to Mr. Bishop's generosity that this latest manifestation of it attracted no particular attention.

It is natural that Mr. Bishop should feel interested in any institution bearing the name of Kamehameha, for his wife, now deceased, was a member of that distinguished family. She was Princess Bernice Pauahi and was the last of the direct line of descendants from the great King, Kamehameha I. Her prestige was largely influential in making the fortune of her husband, who established a banking business in Honolulu early in the fifties.

Mr. Bishop was born at Glens Falls, N. Y., about 70 years ago and made his voyage around Cape Horn with the forty-niners. He thought he saw a more promising Eldorado in the Sandwich Islands than in California, and accordingly repaired to that then remote kingdom. His business career there has been very successful, and he is now probably the richest man on the island.

MR. EMBREE WASN'T THERE.

Those Who Thought They Saw Him at the Theater Were Mistaken.

Rev. A. S. Embree said in his sermon yesterday:

"A man went to the theater the other night. From his great remembrance to me it was that I was there. But I was not. Now, why should that have been considered such an unusual and important thing for a minister of the Gospel? Why should there be such a difference in the standard for the laity and that which out of regard for his high calling, is set up for the minister?"

"If the theater and other amusements are harmless for laymen they are for the minister. But that is not the way to look at it. That same conversation which so tenderly rebukes the minister about with safeguards should be extended to every individual."

The gentleman who is Rev. Mr. Embree's "double" is Dr. Wood. The latter is frequently arrested as "Mr. Embree" by Mr. Embree's parishioners, and many amusing mistakes have resulted.

THE BUZZING BEE.

Whizzing Around in Many Presidential Bonnets.

Harrison, Reed and McKinley of the Republicans.

WON'T BE FROM SOUTH.

Democrats Look to Whitney, Flower or Lamont.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 29.—[Special.]—It is very generally admitted here by Republican leaders that ex-President Harrison will for the third time be a candidate for presidential honors when the Republican national convention is held, but at the same time the men who declare that General Harrison is already laying the wires to secure the nomination insist the ex-president can never again carry off the prize. They insist that he is weaker today than at any time since his first nomination. This appears to be an extreme view of the situation to an unprejudiced observer. The politicians are so sure the most of them make the same declaration last time and had to eat their words afterward.

If General Harrison's name is presented to the Republican nominating convention, his chances will be as good as if not better than those of any other candidate. Harrison is by far the greatest politician we have to a race unless he has every reason to anticipate success. There is no doubt that Mr. Harrison would be quite willing to head the Republican national ticket. A member of his family admitted as much a few days ago in private conversation. "This this statement cannot be taken as authentic, it quite clearly shows the ex-president's intention to run if convinced he can win."

But it is quite difficult at this time to conceive of a political situation which would make Mr. Harrison the logical candidate of the Republicans in 1896. Every Republican here contends, and many Democrats admit, that if the election was held tomorrow the Democrats would be snowed under many thousand feet. The Republicans also admit and the Democrats hesitate to deny that the next house of representatives will have an overwhelming Republican majority—as large as it is not larger than that now held by the Democrats. This only makes the desire for the presidential nomination all the stronger. Reed and McKinley have had the presidential bee-buzzing in their bonnets for several years past, but Reed has election was altogether indifferent, and McKinley was by no means aggressive. At best both men feared defeat at heart, and subsequent events showed their fears to have been well founded.

The situation today is exactly the reverse. Both men are confident that President Cleveland will have a Republican for a successor. In the meantime, Reed has been a candidate of the Republicans in 1896. Every Republican here contends, and many Democrats admit, that if the election was held tomorrow the Democrats would be snowed under many thousand feet. The Republicans also admit and the Democrats hesitate to deny that the next house of representatives will have an overwhelming Republican majority—as large as it is not larger than that now held by the Democrats. At best both men feared defeat at heart, and subsequent events showed their fears to have been well founded.

Who will be Mr. Cleveland's legatee? This question puzzles every Democrat who had it flung at him. Most of them got out of it by giving the exceedingly foolish statement that they did not know. When informed they were not expected to know what was to happen two years hence, but were only asked to think, they would look dreadfully bored and ask to be excused. "Private" John Allen of Mississippi replied: "What! You ask me to think! Impudent! On one point they do agree. Mr. Cleveland will not run again, but he would not like to remain for another four years at the head of the government, but he remembers the experience of Grant, who in his day had as strong a hold on the people as any president since Lincoln."

Who will succeed Cleveland? The Democratic candidate will not come from the south. That is equally certain as that Mr. Cleveland will not be re-elected himself. Who, then, shall it be? HILL No. He is too closely identified with New York, to be good or bad, to make his nomination wise. There are three men in New York state who are certain to figure more or less prominently in the Democratic convention. They are ex-Secretary Whitney, Governor Flower and Secretary of War Lamont. In the event of a contest for the support of the state delegation, Cleveland would be almost certain to throw all his influence to Lamont. The latter is undoubtedly closer to the president today than any other man unless it be Gresham. Mr. Lamont is regarded by many as the power behind the throne.

But there are many prominent Democrats who are strongly in favor of going elsewhere than New York for a candidate. The day has passed, they justly contend, when the old saying, "As goes New York, so goes the Union," will hold good. These men want the candidate selected from a middle or western state. Just who is the best man from these sections they are not prepared to say. There is such a scarcity of presidential timber out there that it would be almost like looking for hen's teeth on a Kansas farm.

A rope was thrown into the hole soon after young Milleham fell in, but it slipped out of the hand of the man who held it. When the body was recovered one end of the rope was clasped in the boy's hand. The boy's father, Samuel Milleham, is a brother of John Milleham and is employed in the Union Pacific shops at Armstrong.
